

an amorphous carbon shell coating the outside of the crystalline graphite core wherein a differential thermal analysis conducted on the carbonaceous active material in 10°C increments per minute starting from room temperature and proceeding to 1000°C at atmospheric pressure results in the displaying of at least two exothermic peaks overlapping to form shoulders and the amorphous carbon shell coating is derived from an amorphous carbon precursor solution.